'Corporate welfare' spoils IEA papers

by Albert Nerenberg

Many of the U.S. counterparts to the McGill Magazine are now broke or struggling, after being spoiled by "corporate welfare" supplied in start-up grants and subsidies by the Institute for Educational Affairs (IEA), according to both a prominent U.S. student conservative and a Washington political research centre.

Fred Clarkson, Research Director of Interchange, a Washington-based independent national organization which monitors extreme right-wing activity, told the Daily "a lot of papers started-up by the IEA have failed. The IEA is corporate welfare for rich students who can't go out and earn an honest living or publish newspapers by advertising," he said.

Michael Johns, Editor-in-chief of the Miami Tribune, an ultra-conservative publication at the University of Miami, claims his is the only publication (in the IEA network) in North America which has become self-sufficient through advertising.

"The struggling ones (newspapers) make the mistake of relying on the welfare state of the IEA," he said.

Clarkson believes the conservative and New Right movements have a point in claiming conservatives have had difficulty airing their views in North American universities.

"I appreciate the complaints about the suppression of conservative opinions on campus," he said. "But the IEA's subsidisation and creation of ultra-conservative student newspapers has to be the greatest hypocrisy of free enterprise advocacy."

The established Canadian ultra-conservative student magazines say they rely on funding from private donors. McGill Magazine, University of Toronto Magazine, and Liberitas at Queens, received subsidies from the IEA. The Magazines at McGill and Toronto were also given grants by the Bank of Montréal. Several newspapers on both campuses boycott this bank because of its policy of lending money to the South African government.

The University of Toronto Magazine published with few ads this year and on a reduced publication schedule. This year McGill Magazine dropped its professional lay-out, has few ads and also appears to be publishing on a reduced

Win a car to help the poor in Africa

by Catherine Bainbridge

A McGill oceanography graduate is raffling off her car to raise money for relief and development projects in Africa.

"My idea was to give people an incentive after Christmas to keep up the aid to Ethiopia and Africa in general," said Silvine Zimmermann. "Since, I have no money to give and I can't keep the car anyway I might as well raffle it."

"I could just sell the car and give the money myself but this way more money can be raised and more people can get involved," she added.

The 1976 red Honda Civic is in good condition and comes complete with a yellow 'Nuclear Non Merci' sticker on the side and a can of red paint.

All proceeds from the raffle will go to Development and Peace, a Catholic Organisation started in 1967 to promote self-sufficiency throughout the Third World.

"I chose them because they don't have the administrative costs of organisations like Oxfam and UNICEF and they deal directly with the villagers they are trying to help," said Zimmermann.

"We don't deal with any foreign governments. We work through the missionaries and pastors in the villages overseas," Development and Peace administrative director Franco Bergamin says. Overhead costs are only 8 per cent compared to Oxfam's 25 per cent.

The organisation concentrates mainly on setting up ir-

IEA reconsidering Canada campaign

by Albert Nerenberg

The president of the conservative U.S. Institute for Educational Affairs (IEA) told a Globe and Mail reporter he is reconsidering the Institute's bankrolling of students interested in starting ultra-conservative newspapers in Canada.

An investigation of the IEA's activities in Canada by the McGill Daily and the Ryersonian and subsequent investigations by Canadian Press, CBC's National and the Globe and Mail have impeded IEA plans in Canada, he said.

"I have since become aware of my naiveté" he told the Globe in an article December 15th.

Marcus, who describes the IEA as "a neo-conservative force", said he found "nothing unusual in the beginning" about the IEA funding Canadian university newspapers because "universities are universities and discourse is discourse, no matter where."

In 1983 the IEA provided

Put the spirit back in Gertrudes

MSS resumes control of the taps

by Melinda Wittstock

McGill Students' Society has regained control of its spirits this semester, after an Executive Committee decision taken mid-December to resume MSS management of both Gertrude's Pub and the Alley.

Deciding to "put the spirit back into Gert's to make the students come back," the MSS has taken the management of both pubs away from C.V.C. and put it back into its own hands.

Les Services Alimentaires C.V.C., contracted by the MSS in September to manage all Students' Society food and beverage operations, will now deal only with the management of food operations.

Although already implemented, the decision will not be official until it has been ratified by Students' Council.

The decision to take control of the pubs, says MSS Vice President University Affairs Scott Keating, was taken "in an attempt to reach out to students and show we care."

First semester, the MSS had no effective control over the management of either pub. At the same time, less and less students were going to Ger-

"We're hoping to bring students back to Gertrude's," says Keating, "and we couldn't do it effectively with the structure we had before (with C.V.C. management)."

According to Keating, the MSS did not have much input into the management of the pubs, and as a result could not change the way either pub was running. "So," says Keating, "we modified the structure."

"We realized last semester that a student pub is an important part of any Students' Society, and because of this," he says, "it's important that Council is able to make decisions and have them implemented quickly."

With C.V.C., an extra step in the decision making process was added and often, says Keating, "they weren't in synch with what we thought should be done." As well, the C.V.C.

managers were afraid to make decisions without head office approval, adds Keating.

Although the MSS contract with C.V.C. remains the same, C.V.C., which is primarily a food company with not much experience in pub management, will be dealing only with food operations.

MSS Comptroller Jon Shifman will be in charge of overseeing both pubs on behalf of Students' Council. The MSS and C.V.C. will work cooperatively in the management of the pubs, since C.V.C. still has control over the food sold in both Gertrude's and the Alley.

Rolf Walter, manager of C.V.C. at McGill, says the decision will mean better management and better food services.

"We can put all our energies into food services; the MSS can concentrate on the beverage operations," says Walter. This means there will be less management related conflicts between C.V.C. and the MSS with the new set-up. And since C.V.C. will now be concentrating solely on food operations," says Walter, "we'll be able to wipe out all the complaints about our services."

Walter thinks the result of improved food services will "show students that we're not here just to make some money but to give something back."

"The change is not really all that dramatic," says Walter. "All it means is that the MSS can decide on the spot what to do or what not to do — after all it is their money."

The decision also allows the MSS to profit directly from the pubs, as C.V.C. has dropped its management fee for beverage operations. "Now," says Walter, "all the proceeds (for beverage operations only) will go directly to the MSS."

B.C. Youth: the young and the deskless by Gordon Clark and Stephen Wisenthal of

The Ubysey (University of British Columbia)

Nuclear war is no longer the greatest threat to B.C. students, and we have our government to thank for it.

Young people aren't dying in the streets at a rate greater than usual, but their hopes for a life that includes higher education are quickly being crushed by a series of measures the Social Credit government has undertaken since its re-election in May 1983. The cutbacks in university financing are part of a policy adopted by the B.C. government to restrict quality education to the rich.

Our minister of universities, Pat McGeer, a University of British Columbia professor, says B.C. youth who want a quality education should go to become lectures, and lectures have become arena events. Students are distressed by these events. But they are more concerned by the university's decigone, the bones are being ground away. UBC faces a further $7 million shortfall next year even with a third year without salary increases to faculty and staff, and ignoring the possible five per cent cut.

The government has not limited its pillage to just the funding of post-secondary institutions. Other programmes that affect students have also suffered. In the last two years, student aid has been reduced to a luxury accessible to only a few lucky individuals. There is no longer any form of grant program in B.C., and funding for student loans has been significantly reduced.

The combined effect of increased tuition, lack of student aid, and reduction of both quality and programmes at post secondary institutions means fewer and fewer people will have access to education in B.C. This effect is amplified by the record unemployment in the province that particularly affects youth. People between the ages of 18 and 25 have a 25 to 30 per cent unemployment rate.

In a province where one in four people is either on welfare or unemployment insurance, the Sacred régime shows surprising lack of fore-sight with the U.S. He is especially fond of Stanford where his daughter is currently studying. This elitist attitude permeates the entire government and explains the accelerating erosion of education programmes in the province.

The first sign of this alarming new attitude in the government was their announcement to the province's three universities in January 1983 that they should not expect any increase in funding for the fiscal year 1983/84. For the current 1984/85 fiscal year they upped the ante, administering a five per cent cut to the dollar figure for universities. For the University of British Columbia this meant a total shortfall of $18 million last year in a budget of over $200 million.

The institution managed to lay off or retire people and trim other areas enough to maintain relatively normal operations. But classes are now overcrowded, discussion groups have

McGILL'S CONTRIBUTION TO ETHIOPIAN JEWRY

In recent days the airlift of Ethiopian Jews (or Falashas — "stranger") to Israel has become public news. Although the operation was kept quiet for some time, the world is now focussing on this new aspect of the Ethiopian situation.

The McGill Hillel Taskforce for Ethiopian Jewry has, however, been helping the Ethiopian Jews for the past six years. The Taskforce has run special projects in the past few years in an attempt to send money and material aid (clothing etc) to Ethiopian Jews in Israel. According to Joanne Wolfe, co-chairperson of the Taskforce, money is sent to Israel to aid the spiritual leader of the Ethiopian Jews who is at present in Israel.

The Ethiopian Jews already in Israel are in absorption centres where volunteers help to cope with the integration process into Israeli society. At least one ton of clothing has been sent to these absorption centres. The Taskforce believes although it has been active on many levels it is on the absorption level that they have contributed the most.

The Taskforce hopes to raise community awareness about the Falasha while accomplishing a more concrete end by fund-raising.

OUT OF WORK LIBERAL CHOOSES MCGILL

Monique Begin, the Minister of Health in the Trudeau cabinet for a number of years, has decided to come to McGill.

Although her expected presence on campus was confirmed by Dean of Arts Maxwell, her exact position is as yet undecided. However, it will be within the McGill Department of Sociology.

UNPAID FEES? DON'T PANIC (YET)

As most students have realized by now, the university is no longer prepared to have unpaid tuition bills lying about.

Payment is now on a one semester basis, therefore, ID cards are validated only for one semester. Students will be able to use cards valid for last semester until the end of January, at which point they must have the new validation sticker on their card.

ID cards are needed in order for students to vote in McGill elections, borrow library books, get into McLennan Library on Sundays, getting into Gerts, and a host of other easy to forget items.

Students received the schedule detailing time and location of validating booths in the mail.

MSS HAS PLANS FOR BETTER STUDENT PUBS...

Students' Society wants more students to come back to Gertrude's and the Alley this semester. Both pubs just aren't as popular as they used to be — on a Tuesday night, sometimes only six or seven students are there.

So the MSS is embarking on a new "marketing and promotion campaign" aimed at attracting more students to the pubs. According to Manager of Pubs Suzanne Mantha, the MSS is offering new programming and better entertainment to entice students to come back. "We're trying to put the spirit back into Gert's," she says.

This semester in Gertrude's, MSS has regular entertainment planned every second week. Since students don't seem to be going to Gertrude's just for the booze anymore, so MSS is going to attract students through comedy nights, theme nights, and live bands.

...AND CVC HAS PLANS TO MAKE DIGESTABLE FOOD

Les Services Alimentaires C.V.C. has plans this semester to increase the quality of food. As well, they are now offering specials. Students can now have coffee or milk with a doughnut in the cafeteria for 69 cents. In the early morning hours (beginning at 07h00) the breakfast special will be hash browns, eggs, bacon, toast coffee etc. for $1.49.

For carnivores out there, the cafeteria is introducing 'The Carvery'. This is daily meat special which will operate on a rotating schedule. All meals will cost $2.95. Some examples are Baron of Beef-100 grams, Horesradish-Au Jus and Corned Beef Brisket-100 grams, Hot Mustard.

C.V.C. Manager Rolf Walter says he wants to co-operate better with students "We want to show them we're not here just to make some money but to give something back."

He adds that CVC is doing "whatever possible, whatever we can" so students like the food.

Choice is fundamental right

There is an element of hatred and vengeance in the movement that claims to value life above all else. Implicit in the self righteousness that drives the pro-life crusade is punishment for the woman who gets herself into a unwanted pregnancy.

cy. A young woman who has an abortion is painted as a selfish murderess. She is never a 40 year old mother of three, nor a housewife, but a slut, a coldly ambitious careerist, or an irresponsible teen. Her sexual intercourse is akin only to the fuck in the backseat of a chevy.

The unspoken bottom line at the centre of the anti-abortion movement is not love of Christianity but retribution "she did it and she should pay for it, not the child." The forced bearing of an unwanted child is seen to be richly deserved. The humiliation is just. The self-sacrifice is demanded.

However, in the good old days before abortion was legalised 67.6 per cent of the women who had abortions were married and already had children.

Those fighting for legal and accessible abortion clinics are not fighting for the right to wipe out their uterus like a kitchen sink. Many women of our age and status would find the prospect of being spread, opened and bled more devastating than the humiliation of attending their classes for 9 months with a swelled belly. But, no matter what choice is made, the majority of women of university age are pro-choice. This according to the president of The Ontario Coalition for Abortion Clinics, Judy Rebeck. The pro-choice movement is exactly that, the right to choose and the right to control your body and reproductive functions. However this does not imply abortion be legalised as a method of birth control.

The right to choose is the fundamental principle of feminism. Women should also have the right to choose to bear children. This right is denied many women of colour in both the West and the Third World. White society working on the premise that there were too many 'darkies' out there utilised forced sterilisation for many women. These women do need their children, simply to carry out the work necessary for survival. Female selflessness expresses itself in the conviction that a fertilized egg is more important and authentic than an adult female. The official position of the Catholic Church in a situation where it is a choice between the mother or the baby in child birth, the babies life takes precedence.

Women have a moral duty to reproduce no matter what the cost. This is based on a simple, 'natural' premise. Women can be penetrated and bear babies therefore women SHOULD be penetrated and bear babies. This logic does not apply to men and is applied wholly to a woman in her reproductive capacity. One does not for instance say — women have delicate hands therefore women should be surgeons.

Historically women have been defined, valued and judged by their bodies. From the freedom to control one's own body comes other fundamental feminist freedoms — to be free from rape and the fear of rape, to be free from battery, incest, sexual harassment, objectification and fetishization of the body.

What a woman decides to do if she gets pregnant is a personal and moral decision. Even if you will never have an abortion, you should not define the future for all women. Women should be free to make their own choice.

Catherine Bainbridge

Anna Asimakopulos

Leela Madhavan

Pro-choice is anti-feminist

The notion that abortion promotes women's rights is a myth. In fact, it reinforces the patriarchal structures of society. The argument that abortion is a women's choice is in itself exploitative because it places the entire burden of the responsibility on the women's shoulders. Women are told that the choice is theirs, when men and society are also involved in the choice while not always taking a part in the responsibility. WEBA (Women Exploited By Abortion) reports that "women testify to being exploited by partners more interested in themselves and doctors and counsellors more interested in making a dollar than in saving human life."

Men often pressure women into abortions for economic or social reasons. At the same time they claim that it is the women's choice. This is a continuation of the age-old tendency of some men to have no sense of obligation towards the child that they have helped to make. One way or another the woman bears the entire responsibility. Either it is her "duty" to bring up the child all on her own or she carries the full brunt of the guilt of abortion.

Abortion is often presented as a remedy to the trauma of bearing an unwanted child. The trauma of abortion, however, is ignored. In the first two years of legal abortion in Canada, psychiatrist Dr. Eloise Jones recommended approximately 500 therapeutic abortions. Although the immediate reaction may have been relief, so many women returned to her with related psychosomatic problems that she stopped recommending abortion altogether. She reports in many cases "sexual frigidity, hatred for the boyfriend or spouse, sometimes transferred to all men, anxiety, all kinds of neurotic disturbances and some deep depressive reactions."

Students and working women often fear losing their education or their job because of unwanted pregnancy. The possibility of adoption makes this unnecessary. (Day care is of course a consideration for those who want to keep their baby) Many of us have friends who were adopted, and there is no shortage of good homes for children (5-7 year waiting list). A system of more open adoption where the natural mother is permitted to maintain some contact with her child would make it less heart-wrenching for the mother and so should be supported.

One question that cannot be avoided in this discussion is the life of the unborn child. From a biological and scientific point of view, human life begins at conception. At the moment of conception, all of the genetic information which will direct a human life through each of its stages of development is complete. Everything is pre-programmed, from the colour of a person's eyes, to their height, to the length of their life span (all of this being subject to environmental factors, of course). One cannot scientifically draw an arbitrary line in the development of a human being and state that before that line they are no human. Biologically, a human being is a human being at every stage of his or her development which begins at conception and continues before and after birth. The heart is beating at 25 days, brain waves can be detected at 45 days, and at 8 weeks all bodily organs are present. If we accept that the life of each individual is important and that the weak must be protected from the abuses of the strong, then abortion is a violation of our values. To argue that the foetus is somehow less than human and can therefore be legitimately destroyed is to adopt the same sort of rationale as that held by those who defended slavery during the American Civil War, or as that held by the Nazis to justify the slaughter of the Jews. Personal value judgements as to what is or is not human have often been used to justify injustice.

It is time for society to take a clearer and more serious look at the implications of abortion for the woman and for the unborn child, and for more men to be sharing the responsibility for the children they have helped to procreate. When abortion was first implemented it was seen as a solution to a problem, but after fifteen years of legal abortion in Canada the consequences of injustice to the unborn child and to the woman are becoming more and more evident.

Students for Life

Over the holidays The Daily scored a minor victory against advertising's totalitarian domination of the newspaper.

At the annual Canadian University Press (CUP) conference the Daily delegation won a waiver of $4,000 of its CUP fees arguing a bleak financial future for the newspaper despite chain-saw cuts to the budget.

Since the 1982-83 year the newspaper itself has undergone cuts of close to one third of its operations, seeing its publishing schedule decrease by more than 20 per cent, individual issues shrink, while advertisements filled up half of each issue. Employee salaries, supplies and long distance budgets were axed. Reporters' budgets, travel funds, any inessential items became folklore.

Winning the waiver means that the newspaper can drop its present ad ratio (50% ads to 50% writing and photographs). This means we can print more pages (with less ads) and accommodate a broader range of news, features, commentary, and photographs as well as expand the scope of the newspapers' services.

The extra money doesn't mean we can return to publishing daily. It does, however, mean the first steps of the Daily's recovery strategy can be made with a little more meat on our bones. The future is still uncertain. The newspaper receives its revenue mainly from three areas. The majority comes from advertising, a smaller amount from student fees and the rest from the Daily typesetting shop. The Daily has reached the point where without a total restructuring it can't expand its ad market, nor can it increase revenue from the shop. The newspapers' fund-raising campaign which raised approximately $5,000 from ex-staff members has been exhausted. Costs, meanwhile, increase.

We can say on paper, that if we stick to the strategy the deficit will disappear. Unfortunately, we can't be so sure the McGill Daily will still exist the day that happens.

That's why the Daily will be asking McGill students for a fee hike this year.

You'll probably be seeing Daily staff around campus pushing the paper and the increase. They will also be there to hear what changes could confirm your support for the newspaper. If you yourself feel strongly about changes or additions to the paper, the invitation remains to make them yourself. The Daily is, after all your newspaper. And if that doesn't convince you then the newspaper is also democratically operated with most of its content decided in open assemblies where, constitutionally, any McGill student can gain voting rights. It also has a little more money to publish — temporarily.

On page 7 the newspaper's annual financial statements are printed. If you have any questions feel welcome to call or contact me at the Daily.

Tips for straight women

Carole Kowcun

This Gay Banter, packed full of sound advice and practical information, is dedicated to heterosexual women in the hopes that this article will provide a valuable learning experience for all of you. In the past, I have noticed that most straight women don't know how to react when they meet a lesbian — as a result, the situation becomes a little embarrassing for all parties concerned. If you think you will never meet a lesbian, or believe that you presently don't know any, here are a few facts for your contemplation. It is estimated that anywhere from one in twenty to one in six women are lesbians. Surely you know at least six women; you probably know twenty, maybe more. So you probably do know a lesbian — even if she's still "in the closet."

If you are now asking yourself how you would react if a lesbian actually told you she was a lesbian, this article is for you. The following sixteen hints, carefully compiled by a team of experts (whose names escape me), should be studied carefully and memorised if possible. Perhaps it would be best to save this article and carry it around with you in your little purse. You never know when the following advice may come in handy. This is serious stuff. Are you ready? Here we go.

When you meet a lesbian: Hints for the Heterosexual Woman

1. Do not run screaming from the room. This is rude.
2. If you must back away, do so slowly and with discretion. Do not grimace, at all costs.

3. Do not assume that she is attracted to you.
4. Do not assume that she is not attracted to you.

THE ENGINEERING ANGLE

Over the years, engineering and industry have fallen into disfavour in the eyes of the public. While the engineer is a recognised benefactor of modern society, s/he seems to have compromised his/her integrity. Is it not, after all, engineering and industry that have created and developed air and water pollution, acid rain, and nuclear armaments?

When engineering became a recognised profession towards the middle of the 19th century, there was great hope that engineers would bring about progress in society through advances in transportation and communications. Farmers and ranchers received greater access to markets through the construction of railways, bridges and tunnels. Communications improved with the telegraph, the telephone, and then radio and television. Advances were made in sanitation to provide people with fresh drinking water and reliable sewage disposal. The impossible was made possible as the engineer sought to improve living conditions through the application of scientific principles.

However, with population growth and industrialization, the long-term effects of this once progressive philosophy were manifested in the destruction of our environment. One production or power plant, isolated from the rest, contributes little to pollution. The problem arose when a number of these plants were designed and built with the idea that the individual effect of each on the environment was negligible. However, the total effect was substantial.

Who was responsible or at fault? Perhaps it was a collective problem: the engineers were to blame. But this is simply a lie.

As with most things, engineering can either be used or abused. While some engineers do not care what environmental havoc they wreak, other engineers are working against this irresponsibility. The engineers in the civil service try to monitor those in private industry, to set safety standards, to limit the release of harmful agents in the air and water.

Different engineers with different views are working against each other. And still, the pollution continues, even though technology is available to prevent problems such as acid rain.

So, who is at fault? It must be those in charge — the business executives and the elected government officials. One serves the god of profits; the other the god of power. The whole problem boils down to a question of politics and economics.

Industry could prevent an environmental crisis. So, why aren't they? Because purifying effusions costs too much. In many of North America's ailing industries, there simply isn't enough money; in others, where there is the money, business people lobby against politicians so they can realize the profit they "deserve" in a free enterprise society.

Politicians, our elected representatives, could curb this tendency through legislation. So, why don't they? Because at the moment, stepping out against acid rain and pollution is not politically sexy. With already high unemployment, any governmental decree to reducing pollution could possibly result in more jobs lost. To keep getting elected the politicians must act economically. It appears the economy and the environment are working against one another.

A policy of killing our forests and contaminating our water for short-term economic gain is short-sighted. But it got Ronald Reagan elected. Twice. And, any intelligent person can see the coming tragedy.

So again, whose fault is it? No one's in particular. Just human stupidity translated into votes. When the crisis happens, we will probably be able to extricate ourselves. We will prove again to ourselves that people do not act; they react.

The responsibility for current standards in pollution is not uniquely the engineers', but is shared by all members of society. However, as purveyors of technology, engineers should be more aware of where technology will lead us, and how they can prevent (wo)man-made crises. Specifically how they can accomplish this is a matter for further consideration. □

AUDITORS' REPORT To the Members of Daily Publications Society/ Société de Publications du Daily We have examined the balance sheet of the Daily Publications Society/ Société de Publications du Daily as at April 30, 1984 and the statements of earnings, deficit and changes in financial position for the year then ended. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, and accordingly included such tests and other procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances. In our opinion, these financial statements present fairly the financial position of the Society as at April 30, 1984 and the results of its operations and the changes in its financial position for the year then ended, in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year. and that women should help men fight their oppression. These are common fallacies and should be understood as such.

9. Do not invite her someplace where there will be men unless you tell her in advance. She may want to choose if she wants to be in a group with men.

10. Do not ask her how she got this way. Instead, ask yourself how you got that way.

11. Do not assume she is dying to talk about being a lesbian.

12. Do not expect her to refrain from talking about being a lesbian.

13. Do not trivialize her experience by assuming it is a bedroom issue only. She is a lesbian 24 hours a day.

14. Do not assume that because she is a lesbian she wants to be treated like a man.

15. Do not assume that her heart will leap for you if you touch her arm (condescendingly?...flirtatiously?...powerfully...) It may make her angry.

16. If you are tempted to tell her she's taking the easy way out, think about it.

Now, that wasn't so difficult, was it? And perhaps the next time you see a pink triangle, you won't fear from fear of the unknown. If you do faint, though, perhaps you should read this article again and ask yourself what you are afraid of. P.S. Hint N°. 17: Do not stop breathing. Lesbianism is not caused by a virus.

start-up grants of $3,000 to McGill Magazine and $2,700 to the University of Toronto Magazine and $2,000 to Libertas at Queens University this year.

The IEA has provided combinations of start-up grants, funds, editorial internships, and advice to 69 ultra-conservative student newspapers in North America.

Marcus told Canadian Press the IEA only provides money to genuine student newspapers written by full-time students on the campuses where they are published. However, John Mullholland, appointed editor of Libertas, said no Queens students were involved in the first and so far only issue of the paper.

"Nobody here had anything to do with it," he said.

Libertas is almost identical to six other publications which appeared at universities around Québec and Ontario which listed Francis Willers, a McGill Continuing Education student, as Publisher.

Andrew Hewett, president of the Student's Council at Bishop's University said he was unable to find anybody on campus who had worked on the newspaper which appeared under the title St. Bishop.

"I would say that to publish

...spoiled on corporate welfare

Clarkson says the legitimacy of the IEA, which has funded 69 newspapers in North America since 1979, as an "educational institution" is questionable.

"It's a laundry," he said.

"It's designed to strategically deploy certain corporate and corporate foundation funds towards conservative causes."

The IEA was formed in 1979 by William Simon, U.S. Treasurer under the Nixon administration, and Irving Kristol, well-known neo-conservative philosopher, when 4 major corporate foundations — the John Olin, Smith Richardson and J.M. foundations and the Scaife Family Charitable Trusts — each put forward $100,000 for the IEA.

In the IEA's 1983 annual report president Phillip Marcus explained the accomplishments of the IEA.

"The IEA has committed, repeatedly and successfully, acts of intellectual entrepreneurship. In a brief five years the IEA has become one of the nation's largest grant-giving foundations.

We have dared to challenge the adversary culture."

The IEA is attempting to change the intellectual atmosphere of North America, which it claims has an entrenched "liberal, left-wing bias" which is fiercely opposed to business and U.S. foreign policy. □

The debates within Canadian University Press

by Leela MadhavaRau

For nine days, five delegates from the Daily joined in a general melée otherwise known as the annual conference of Canadian University Press (CUP).

CUP is an organisation composed of the majority of the country's English-language university, college and CEGEP campus newspapers. The organisation, like UPI or Canadian Press, pools information and distributes it to all members in the form of weekly news, features and graphics exchanges. CUP also operates its own national advertising co-operative known as Campus Plus. Many of the ads found in the Daily are obtained through this agency.

So, what do 150 student journalists talk about for nine days — probably everything and nothing. Most newspapers' delegates are sent to the conference with specific motions to lobby for. Each newspaper and each region (the Atlantic, Ontario, the West, and Québec) lobbied for their own pet projects.

There were also a number of seminars on writing, editing, production, budgeting for newspapers, autonomy drives and other diverse subjects. Featured were speakers such as Susan Cole from the Toronto feminist newspaper Broadside, Lizzie Borden, producer of the film 'Born in Flames', several representatives from environmental groups, and Eleanor McLean who spoke on propaganda and bias in the media. True to the theme of the conference, Women in the Media, all speakers were women.

We stayed awake through the 27 hour final plenary when all the important business was debated. We watched as newspapers attempted to close deals (well, if you do this and we do that...). Delegates fell asleep as speaker after speaker reiterated exactly the same point as the speaker before her/him.

However, most newspapers and regions got at least part of what they wanted.

CUP passed motions citing the need for campus newspapers to investigate the Institute of Educational Affairs (IEA), which supplied start-up grants to the McGill and University of Toronto Magazines as well as further investigation of the National Citizens Coalition. The Daily also called for increased coverage of racism and race relations. □ rigation systems and wells. Such projects include teaching farming techniques to utilise the water efficiently and teaching the villagers how to repair the new water systems.

"Our projects last at the most two to three years. We try to assure the system we set up will be self-sufficient by that time," Bergamin said.

Since mid November, Development and Peace has raised $5.5 million in emergency relief funds for Ethiopia. They have also received $10 million from churches across the country for other development projects in Asia and Latin America. This amount will be matched by the federal government.

If you want to see the red Honda it is in the parking lot across from the Rutherford Physics Building. (McGill Physical Plant donated free parking space for the car so students can get a chance to look at it).

For a chance to win just write out a cheque for 5 dollars (or more) to Development and Peace — the Africa Division rency into their economy.

Other travel companies boycott South Africa because of the government's apartheid policies.

Jardine says the tour is not being arranged through the Canadian Hostelling Association, but through the country itself.

"We haven't received any specific information about it," she says.

Dan Bordeaux of the CHA office in Ottawa says South Africa, because of its apartheid policies, is not recognized as a full voting member of the organisation, and is currently under review.

"We aren't supposed to support South Africa," Bordeaux says, citing the CHA as a government-funded body should comply with the federal government's anti-apartheid stand.

Bordeaux said he was surprised the Nova Scotia Hosteller printed the information about the tour.

Funding for the tour, as stated in the newsletter, was donated by the Richard Sherman Fund of the IYHF, named after the founder of the hostelling movement. Additional funds were also obtained from Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Norway, Iceland, and the Federal Republic of Germany.

and bring it to the McGill Daily, room B03 in the Union Building or to Barbara, secretary in the Institute of Oceanography also located across from the Rutherford Physics Building. Include your name, address and phone number somewhere on the cheque.

The raffle will be held on Friday 18 at 14h00 in the lobby of the Union Building — Principal Johnston will draw for the winner.

Hostels promote travelling in South Africa

ST. JOHN'S — (CUP) The South African government is hoping students from Nova Scotia will visit the racially-segregated country through an international hostelling organisation.

In the Fall 1984 edition of the Nova Scotia Hosteller, the International Youth Hostelling Federation lists South Africa as one of the countries open to travelling students. A "hostel on wheels" service brings interested students around the country and in neighbouring Lesotho, although no indications are given as to what participants can expect to see.

Nancy Jardine of the Nova Scotia branch of the Canadian Hostelling Association says the purpose of the hostelling movement is to "promote interaction between countries, and to foster a better idea of...the common ground between people."

Geoff Martin, a fourth year Political Science major at Dalhousie University and chair of the Students' Union, doesn't think the South African government is interested in any ideals.

"South Africa is having a currency shortage," Martin says, adding that the government has been lobbying travel agencies to attract foreign cur-
